

PETER LOWE

ICC-COMMERCIAL CRIME SERVICES

Peter left Bristol University with an honours degree in History. Forsaking a career in teaching and with nothing better to do, he went on to qualify as a lawyer. After working long hours for poor pay in the City of London, he became interested in the concept of accumulating large sums of money with minimal effort, a facility that many of his clients possessed but which had eluded him.

Suspecting that fraud might be the answer to his prayers he joined the newly formed International Maritime Bureau in 1982. His aim was quite simply to obtain the best possible education on deception, travel the world at the expense of others and meet lots of glamorous women who are never far from the side of sophisticated villains.

He soon found himself travelling the globe in the wake of sinking ships, stolen cargoes and suspect characters and in 1990 found his way into counterfeiting. Along the way he has been fortunate enough to stay at some wonderful hotels, meet lovely women and travel to exotic places.

However he has failed to achieve his youthful ambition. Although rich in fraud experience he still remains poor in monetary terms and early retirement on a sun-drenched coral island with a windsurfer and diving equipment remains as elusive as ever!
